Dear Reader,

In celebration of Poetry Month, we’ve drawn upon poems from across Shel Silverstein’s classic poetry books—Where the Sidewalk Ends, A Light in the Attic, Falling Up, and Every Thing On It—to create a brand-new poetry experience. In this kit, children will learn about many different types of poetry, gain clever tips to write their own, and compile their own poetry portfolio, all while having some fun along the way. Perfect for use in the classroom, in a bookstore, or at home, the Poetry Workshop Kit will give both children and adults renewed appreciation for poetry and the work of Shel Silverstein.

So come in, open your imagination, bend your brain, and let the magic of Shel Silverstein fill your mind this Poetry Month!

Enjoy hosting your own Shelebration® event!
Rhyming poetry is one of the most common types of poetry—and sometimes the most fun! Rhymes can happen in many different patterns within a poem, such as every line, every first and third line, or every second and fourth line. Most of Shel Silverstein’s poems use rhyme, and a great example is “I Don’t Know” from Every Thing On It. Read the excerpt below. What kind of rhyming pattern do you notice? How does Shel use repetition in this poem?

I DON’T KNOW

I don’t know how anything’s done.
Does the earth turn or is it the sun?
Is electricity made by a kite?
Are star twinkles just the reflection of light?
How thunder is made and how engines run—
I don’t know how anything’s done.

Shel was an expert with rhyme, but how polished are YOUR skills? See how many rhyming words you can make for each of the words in the list below and write them in the space provided. After you brainstorm, choose one group of words and compose a rhyming poem that would make Shel proud!

POETRY TIP!
Remember that sometimes words can look different but still rhyme.
An epigram is a short and witty poem typically written as a couplet or a simple one-line phrase. Shel often uses this succinct but powerful type of poetry, usually accompanied by art. Read “Stone Airplane” from Falling Up. How do the words and illustration work together to create a humorous poem?

Now it’s your turn! Use your imagination to write another two-line epigram on the lines below that continues the story of “Stone Airplane.” Then think of two additional epigrams about topics of your choice and add them to this page. Don’t forget to include illustrations!

STONE AIRPLANE

I made an airplane out of stone . . .
I always did like staying home.

POETRY TIP!

Use an epigram to give funny advice or make an ironic statement.

Visual Poetry

Visual poetry uses text, images, or symbols to help convey the meaning of the poem. With this type of poetry, the visual arrangement of the elements of the poem is more important than the words in conveying its meaning.

Read the poem “Lazy Jane” from Where the Sidewalk Ends. How is the way the poem is displayed on the page key to the meaning of poem? Would the poem be as funny without the illustration? Why or why not?

Come up with a new way to depict the poem in the box to the right, with either an illustration or a clever arrangement of the text. Does your drawing or arrangement change its meaning? How?

LAZY JANE

Lazy

Jane,
she

a drink

so she waits
and

and waits
and waits

it to

POETRY TIP!

Use the descriptions in a poem as a guide when you decide how to display it on the page.

Concrete Poetry

Concrete poetry (also called shape poetry) is similar to visual poetry, but instead of using visual clues to reinforce meaning, it uses the actual arrangement of the words in a shape or other design to convey the subject or idea of the poem. For example, read “Circle Road” from Every Thing On It below. You'll notice that the poem itself is displayed as a circle. How does this placement help you better understand the poem? Would the poem make sense if it was displayed as a square?

Try your hand at a concrete poem! Write about something you know (and can draw), such as a favorite food or sport. Using a pencil, in the space below sketch an outline of your object as a guide when writing. Then compose your poem in the space of the drawing. When your poem is complete, erase the outline—your poem should represent the thing you are writing about! Add extra details in or around the poem the way Shel does in “Circle Road” to help convey its meaning.
List Poetry

List poetry is comprised of a list of things, places, people, or events, and it can be any length, rhymed or unrhymed. Take a look at “A Closet Full of Shoes” from Falling Up below—Shel takes an ordinary list of items (in his case, shoes) and makes it extraordinary by adding humor, rhymes, descriptive words, and even illustrations.

What other types of lists would make funny poems?

On a piece of scrap paper, write ten items that would be on your family’s grocery list, such as apples, bread, or eggs. Then in the space to the right, turn your list into a poem. Using the words you wrote, describe the items you see in the grocery store, being as silly and creative as you can. Read your finished poem the next time you go food shopping with your family—you won’t forget a thing!

A Closet Full of Shoes

Party shoes with frills and bows,
Workin’ shoes with steel toes,
Sneakers, flip-flops, and galoshes,
Boots to wear with mackintoshes,
Brogans, oxfords, satin pumps,
Dancin’ taps and wooden clumps,
Shoes for climbin’, shoes for hikes,
Football cleats and baseball spikes,
Shoes of shiny patent leather,
Woolly shoes for winter weather,
Loafers, rough-outs, sandals, spats,
High heels, low heels, platforms, flats,
Moccasins and fins and flippers,
Shower clogs and ballet slippers . . .
A zillion shoes and just one missin’—
That’s the one that matches this’n.

POETRY TIP!

The possibilities are endless when writing list poems, but make sure your items are all related in some way.
Rebus Poetry

A rebus is a poem that uses pictures or symbols in place of actual words. Rebuses are helpful (and clever!) ways to build reading and writing skills and incorporate art into a poem. In “Deaf Donald” from A Light in the Attic, Shel uses a drawing in place of an idea to create a humorous story about a boy who can’t hear or speak. How does the drawing lend meaning to the poem?

Turn the poem below from A Light in the Attic into a rebus! Use the list of words above the poem to fill in the blanks, but draw a picture in place of the actual word. (Hint: the words that rhyme go together—except for one!)

LOG      BEE      SWATTER      SNAKE      PIG      FEATHER

HITTING

Use a to hit a hog.

Use a twig to hit a .

Use a rake to hit a .

Use a to hit an otter.

Use a ski to hit a .

And use a when you hit me.

POETRY TIP!
Try writing a rebus using all pictures. Then challenge a friend to translate your poem into words.
Did you know that a poem doesn’t have to rhyme? Non-rhyming poetry focuses more on the other elements that make up a poem, such as pattern, rhythm, creativity, and tone. Read “Tell Me” from Falling Up. What kind of beat do you notice when you read the poem aloud? What factors make “Tell Me” a poem even though it doesn’t rhyme?

TELL ME

Tell me I’m clever,
Tell me I’m kind,
Tell me I’m talented,
Tell me I’m cute,
Tell me I’m sensitive,
Graceful and wise,
Tell me I’m perfect—
But tell me the truth.

Are YOU up to the no-rhyme challenge?
Compose a poem about yourself in the style of “Tell Me,” filling in the blanks below. Remember that rhyming words don’t count!

Tell me I’m ___________,

Tell me I’m ___________,

Tell me I’m ___________,

Tell me I’m ___________,

Tell me I’m ___________—

But tell me ___________.

POETRY TIP!
Be creative—employ other tactics, such as repetition or alliteration, to make your poem unique without rhyme.
An acrostic poem uses the letters of a word or name to begin each line of the poem, and each line must in turn relate to the word. Anything goes when it comes to acrostics, and they’re a fun way to add a personal touch to a poem. Study our original example below, which uses Shel as a subject, and then create your own acrostic masterpiece!

Shel was a talented writer

His work is admired by many

Every poem is so clever

Let’s go read them together

In the box below, write an acrostic poem about a friend, family member, or teacher. Your poem can be full sentences or simply a couple of words about your topic. When you finish writing, color and decorate your poem and ask a grown-up to help you cut it out from the page. Give it to the person you wrote about as a gift!

POETRY TIP!
For a different take on this style, write a poem that uses the first letter of a word from the middle of each line of the poem to spell out the poem’s topic.
